The US and the world must have wireless internet. Corporations and big business could not communicate as effectively as it is. When and where do the rights of individuals have precedence over those with money? This is your job and mine to work together to insure that people have an 'uninterrupted voice'. support a free and full wireless internet.

Dear Commissioner McDowell,

I am writing to ask you to support new competition and open access on our public airwaves. It is important that we address this as a matter which will make our country a better place, not just make a few huge corporations wealthier. We must keep up with technology, and not let corporations keep progress from happening.

I live in Richmond, Virginia. The power of the internet never ceases to amaze me, it is a tool for transformation, education, communication, and work. I partly work in the non-profit sector, and it allows for a great network of citizens to do great work, and rely on the access to be affordable and available.

thank you-

I was recently made aware that the FCC is under pressure to sell public airwaves to mega-corporations such as AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast. As a Tennessee resident and college student, I would very much like to see these airwaves projected across this state - and the nation - in competition with these companies. This is a huge step in providing easy access to the internet for all of America - and will also be a huge step for innovation in communication technologies in these other companies.

Without this push, we will merely remain at the mercy of yet more dominating corporations. Again, please don't give these airwaves away - give them back to the American people.

Thank you and have a great day.

Mr. McDowell,

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) will decide very soon how to use a huge chunk of our public airwaves. Recently, a stunning 250,000 Americans urged the FCC to use these airwaves to revolutionize Internet access in our country.

Modern-day innovators are ready to create a vibrant national wireless market-with high-speed Internet signals beamed to every park bench, coffee shop, workplace, and home in America. But big phone and cable companies don't want this competition to their Internet service. They want the FCC to give them control of our airwaves, so they can block innovation and competition.

Can you issue a public statement in support of new competition and "open access" on our public airwaves? Our airwaves need to be protected from corporations like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast that would stifle the national wireless market! Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,

I am writing to you about an important issue that will soon be taken to vote. I am encouraging you to support new competition and open networks on our airwaves. We individuals have little protection from corporations who have the financial means and motivation to control the airwaves. We depend on you to protect and keep the national wireless market open and equitable.

Dear Ms.Tate, I am in favor of open access for our airways. It is time for the people of this country to get some benefit from the communication networks. The big corporations are doing fine without handing them even more profit at the expense of the people of this country. We are rapidly falling behind the rest of the western world in access and speed of internet service. They are strong competition for us now and will be even stronger in the future. We need open internet access in this country for business, pleasure, and learning. Please support the people on this issue. Thank you, Steve Ross Memphis, Tn.

Hi Deborah Taylor Tate,

I am writing to ask you to issue a public statement in support of new competition and "open access" on our public airwaves before the FCC's upcoming vote. Our airwaves need to be protected from corporations like AT&T, Verizon, and Comcast that would stifle the national wireless market.

These corporations already have such a huge hold on the American people already and I fear that if they become in control of the airwaves:

- 1) big companies with little competition will create higher rates
- 2) big companies with little competition will control our freedom of speech
- 3) big companies with little competition will take away our freedom to choose which websites we view
- 4) These higher rates would prohibit many people, especially lower and middle class citizens, from being able to access the internet at reasonable rates.

Please help to keep the control of the national wireless market available for competition and out of the control of big corporations. The FCC needs to ensure that a significant portion of the newly available airwaves go to new market competitors.

As FCC Commissioner from Fairfax County, I urge your support for reassignment of public airways to enable internet improvements. These airwaves should be used for the public access to the public, not giant corporations to stifle competition, block wider public use and turn control over to telecommunications corporations like AT&T and Verizon (at one time a part of AT&T).

FCC can determine whether the public airwaves remain public and benefit the public, rather than to accelerate the reconsolidation of telecommunication monopolies like AT&T once was, and appears to be heading in that direction once again.

I sincerely urge you to take action to insure that the public constituency be served.

Robert McDowell
Commissioner, Federal Communications Commission
445 12th Street, SW
Washington, DC 20554

Dear Robert McDowell:

The Internet has become a vital part of American life. We rely on web-based communication to learn, work, play and communicate on issues of importance to our communities. That is why all American families, schools, independent businesses and charitable organizations need access to Internet service that is fast, free and family-friendly.

America's future broadband infrastructure must allow families access to the benefits of the internet without requiring them to seek out indecency filters. Network providers should take a more active role in blocking indecent material online and help parents protect their children from the dangers of the Internet. Parents should not be expected to become computer experts in order to protect their children from online pornography and children should not be denied the learning opportunities available online because their parents fear they will be exposed to inappropriate content.

Implementation of a proposal now pending with the FCC, such as the one submitted by M2Z Networks (www.m2znetworks.com) to provide a universal, free, fast, and family-friendly broadband service, is supported by the Coalition for Free Broadband Now and is a necessary step to protecting our children online while ensuring that all Americans have affordable Internet access.

This proposal could come at no better time, and I urge you to take action now to ensure it becomes a reality.

Sincerely,

Michael Casper
